

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method of surface or cross-sectional processing and observation comprises a first step of processing at least one predetermined area in a surface of a sample to form a target surface or cross-section, and a second step of observing the target surface or cross-section by scanning the target surface or cross-section with a probe of a scanning probe microscope and detecting a physical quantity produced between the probe and the target surface or cross-section.